What is a bed bug?

Bed bugs are small, reddish brown, flat-bodied, oval-shaped insects that are about 3/16" long or smaller. They easily fit into small cracks and crevices. They can be found in mattresses, bed frames, wall voids, and behind headboards, baseboards, and pictures. Bed bugs feed on the blood of humans, small animals, or birds, and may live for months without feeding. They do not fly or hop but are fast moving. Bed bugs usually come out at night and hide during the day. They lay many tiny white eggs that hatch into more young bed bugs.

Signs of bed bugs

Besides actually seeing live or crushed bed bugs, a common sign is the presence of reddish blood and dark fecal spots on bedding and furniture. Shed skins of the young bed bugs can usually be found where bed bugs hide during the day.

Bed bugs bites

Many people have no reaction to bed bug bites and require no treatment. However, if itching, redness, rashes, or other symptoms occur, see your family physician for relief.
